PREFACE.

THE present work, although somewhat broader in its scope than others of a similar character, was compiled simply as a Text-book for the Washington collector.

To an American no other portrait can possess the interest and significance which will be always attached to that of Washington; and if in contemplating it, we feel impressed with the nobility of his character, the dignity of his manhood, his truth and patriotism, what better page can we study and what better life can we imitate?

The portraits of Washington are fortunately not restricted to a single example nor limited to the individual painter, and while extending over the greater portion of his life, cover more particularly the years devoted to his country. If it is true that "a portrait is a sort of general history of the person it represents," how complete must be that history when fully presented in a regular series, and brought through the medium of the graver to our quiet and careful consideration.

Quite a number of collections of the engraved portraits of Washington have been gathered and some of considerable importance, but as yet no system of arrangement has been attempted by which the prints, although always interesting in themselves, could be intelligently studied either historically or artistically.

With the view, therefore, of making such collections instructive, something more than merely interesting, the system has been adopted of classifying the prints according to the painters, and by furnishing a chronological series of, with but one or two exceptions, all the known originals, give at a glance a concise history of the subject. No other form can so thoroughly enable the student to comprehend the different types of portraits with the period of production, and allow him through his prints to follow the career of "our Washington," and while considering the acts and results of his life, be, at the same time, forcibly reminded of the prominent events of the early history of the Republic, which although comparatively recent in date, we, in the rapid changes of the present, already look back upon with a feeling of antiquity, but not, we hope, in a spirit of forgetfulness.

As indispensable to the proper understanding of the engraved portraits, brief biographical sketches of the painters have been given, restricted as much as possible to the special subject under consideration, which will serve to draw attention to a few originals, not as yet reproduced by the burin, but completing the historical series.

With the exception of the lithographic drawings by Rembrandt Peale, and the one copied from the original etching by Joseph Wright, noticed in consequence of the endorsement certifying to its correctness as a likeness, the catalogue is restricted to the record of the productions of plate engravers only, the large number of wood-cuts and lithographs precluding their admission even if desirable or customary, although many are close renderings of originals and moreover possess considerable artistic merit.

In arranging the prints according to painters more or less difficulty was encountered, it being apparent in some cases that the engraver had worked from no authentic original, the plate being produced either from irresponsible pictures and drawings or other engravings no better entitled to consideration. This necessarily required careful comparison and examination, and from the fact that a number of prints were not available for that purpose, some assignments may be open to objection; it is hoped, however, that in this respect but few errors will be discovered.

A chronological arrangement of the prints in each list would have been the most natural and satisfactory, but the impossibility of obtaining dates of publication of many, rendered this impracticable, and the alphabetical plan was adopted, which in the end renders the catalogue more convenient for reference and enables each engraver's productions, when after the same original, to follow in consecutive order. This has, however, been departed from whenever there existed original prints by any of the painters, as in the case of the plates by Charles Willson Peale, Joseph Wright, Edward Savage, and Saint Memin, and the drawings on stone by Rembrandt Peale above referred to, these forming for such lists the appropriate headings.

All the prints enumerated in the catalogue have come under the immediate notice of the writer, with but two exceptions, one engraved by Norman after Charles Willson Peale, and the other by Hamlin, No. 125, a copy of the mezzotinto by Savage, the first named being in the possession of C. W. Folsom, of Cambridge, Mass., and the latter in the collection of James E. Mauran, of Newport, R. I., to which gentlemen we are indebted for the respective descriptions.

The book-plates have been ascribed to the work in which they were originally published, whenever such information was obtainable, and any omission in this respect it is hoped will be supplied by the interested collector.

The designations rare, very rare, and extremely rare, have been used with much caution, and the term unique entirely discarded. The rarity of a print is a matter somewhat difficult to determine, and at best the use of the terms above mentioned becomes to a greater or lesser extent arbitrary in character. In establishing a rule for their application we have been entirely governed by actual observation and the experience derived from the knowledge of impressions which occur in important collections, and not from the difficulty experienced in obtaining them at present from the folio of the dealer.

The word unique, which may in some instances be properly applied to an impression from a particular state of the plate not intended to be published, cannot with close adherence to truth be used in referring to those taken for the regular edition, no matter how few in number, as it is scarcely probable, especially as to any Washington print, that all have disappeared save one only, and though the possessor is likely in his enthusiasm to declare to the contrary, others sooner or later will come to the surface. Those prints of which only one impression has as yet come under the notice of the writer have been marked accordingly, but the designation unique has been studiously avoided.

A number of prints, from having no means of identification either by title, inscription, or names of engraver or publisher, were omitted, it seeming to be useless to record what could not be discovered either by index or otherwise, the list of anonymous being already much larger than was desirable.

In all the descriptions, the right and the left, it will be understood refer to the right and the left of the observer, as the print is held directly before him.

Apart from the compiler's own collection, the material for the catalogue was obtained from those, formed by the following gentlemen: Thomas A. Emmet, M.D., Edward Dexter, Joseph A. Drexel, John B. Moreau, Charles C. Moreau, William A. Fraser, Henry T. Drowne, and William L. Andrews, of New York; and R. Coulton Davis, Simon Gratz, Ferdinand J. Dreer, Frederick D. Stone, Henry Whelen, Jr., Howard Edwards, and Charles Henry Hart, of Philadelphia; to all of whom he is extremely indebted, for opportunities offered, courteous attention, and aid in examination. To the latter named gentleman, however, something more than mere thanks is due, and we take this opportunity of publicly recognizing our estimation, of his valuable assistance, and practical counsel, constantly given through the progress of the work, the value of which only those familiar with the difficulties of such an undertaking can fully appreciate.

Each one of the collections above mentioned, contains more or less matter which does not exist in the others, the most complete in a general way being that of Mr. Dexter, and the greatest rarities being comprised in Dr. Emmet's.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1, 1879.

CHARLES WILLSON PEALE.

THE painter of the first authentic portrait of Washington, was born of English parents at Chestertown, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, April 15, 1741. At the age of twenty-one, having served his time with a saddler of Annapolis, he commenced for himself, combining with his trade several others, such as coach-making, and clock and watch-making, besides working as a silversmith, and finally trying his hand at portrait painting. In the latter pursuit he had some little advice, a handsome saddle being the consideration, from a Mr. Hesselius, an Englishman, who married and settled in Annapolis in the year 1763.

After a brief visit to Boston, where he was kindly received by J. Singleton Copley, then established as a portrait painter, and who gave him some instruction, Peale determined upon a voyage to London, and being assisted by several gentlemen of Annapolis, the loan to be repaid by pictures, sailed for England, arriving in London in the summer of 1768. Benjamin West received him into his house, and he studied during 1768-69 in the Royal Academy under that painter's direction, at the same time turning his attention to painting in miniature, and engraving in mezzotinto.

On his return in June, 1770, he set up his easel as a portrait painter at Annapolis and Baltimore, finding constant employment and gaining considerable reputation. The fame of the young painter reached Mount Vernon, and he was invited there to delineate for the first time, the form and features of the proprietor.

This picture, painted in May, 1772, a three-quarter length, represents Washington in the costume of a Colonel of the 22d Regiment of Virginia Militia; a blue coat faced with red, bright metal buttons having the number of the regiment cast upon them, and dark red waistcoat and breeches. He wears the hat usually called the Wolfe hat, with sash and gorget. This has been engraved by Steel, Paradise, Parker, Forrest, Rogers, and Buttre.

Peale remained at Mount Vernon several weeks, and painted portraits in miniature of the different members of the family. He finally settled at Philadelphia.

In the summer of 1776, having joined the army as a Captain of Volunteers, Peale painted a half-length portrait of the Commander-in-chief for John Hancock (engraved by Norman), and in December, 1777, completed a miniature for Mrs. Washington. It was begun at the close of October. While sitting for it at a farm house near Skippack Creek, Pennsylvania, the General (who occupied the side of a bed and the artist the only chair in the small room) received dispatches advising him of the capture of Burgoyne, which he merely glanced at, and then remained apparently unconcerned until the sitting was finished. An engraving by De Mare from this miniature, or from a copy made by Peale himself, is published in Irving's Life of Washington, without being ascribed to the painter, and with the erroneous title, "Washington at the age of twenty-five."

A sketch, inscribed "Pencil (sic) sketch of General Washington from life taken by Chas. Willson Peale 1777," in possession of the "Historical Society of Pennsylvania," resembles somewhat this engraving. It is a bust in uniform, slightly executed, inclosed in a border resting upon a base, and seems to have been drawn for the purpose of being engraved. Including the border it is 5 4-16 inches in height by 4 12-16 inches in width.

Congress having passed a resolution previous to the occupation of Philadelphia by the British army, ordering a portrait of the Commander-in-chief, Peale commenced it at Valley Forge in the spring of 1778. Soon after the first sitting, the troops left Valley Forge, and pursued the British in their flight from Philadelphia toward New York. The painter took his materials with him, participated in the battle of Monmouth at the close of June, and a day or two afterward, procured another sitting at New Brunswick. The picture was finally completed at Philadelphia; Nassau Hall, Princeton, is a prominent object in the background.

Congress adjourned without making an appropriation, and the picture remained with the artist until his decease, when it passed into private hands. A copy of it, signed and dated Philadelphia, 1779, was afterwards sent to Europe for sale; it became the property of the Count de Menou, who brought it to the United States and presented it to the National Institute. It is now in possession of the Smithsonian Institution. The engraving by Wolff, a good rendering of the picture and accurate in detail, was most probably executed from this copy. Another copy, painted about the same time, intended as a present to the Stadtholder, was captured in 1780 with Henry Laurens on his passage to Holland, by Captain Keppel of the British Navy, who gave it to his uncle, Admiral Lord Keppel. It is now at Quidenham Park, Norfolk, England, the seat of the Earl of Albemarle, the present head of the Keppel family.

Peale also painted in 1778 a miniature of Washington, for Lafayette; of this he made several copies.

In the winter of 1778-79, Washington being in Philadelphia for a short time, sat at the request of the Council of State (Pa.) to Peale, for a whole length, to be placed in the Council Chamber. From this he seems to have executed a plate in mezzotinto, as appears by the following advertisement in "The Pennsylvania Packet, or the General Advertiser," published at Philadelphia Saturday, August 26, 1780. "The subscriber takes this method of informing the public that he has just finished a mezzotinto print in poster size (14 inches by 10 inches besides the margin) of His Excellency General Washington, from the original picture belonging to the State of Pennsylvania. Shopkeepers, and persons going to the West Indies, may be supplied at such a price as will afford a considerable profit to them, by applying at the Southwest corner of Lombard and Third Streets, Philadelphia. Charles Willson Peale."

This was repeated on September 9th, and with a slight variation on December 6th and 26th of the same year; in these the price, two dollars, being given. No impression of this print, notwithstanding the most diligent inquiry, has come under the notice of the writer. This picture was afterwards (1781), defaced and totally destroyed, by some persons who broke into the Council Chamber, whether from malice or in a wanton spirit of destruction does not appear.

In 1780 Peale painted another whole length, under the following circumstances: At the battle of Princeton, January 3, 1777, when Washington opened fire upon Nassau Hall (occupied by the enemy), the first cannon ball which entered the building passed through the head of a portrait of George II. suspended in a large frame upon the wall. It is alleged that Washington in order to make good to the College the damage sustained by the cannonade, made the Trustees a present from his private purse of two hundred and fifty dollars, which sum they expended in procuring a whole length portrait of the Commander-in-chief, placing it in the identical frame in which hung the king's portrait. In the background is seen Nassau Hall and a sketch of the battle of Princeton, and to the right the figure of General Mercer mortally wounded. There is no engraving of this picture, but it has been reproduced on wood, for illustration. (Lossing's Pictorial Field-book of the Revolution, vol. ii. p. 37.)

In the year 1783 he painted a whole length for the State of Maryland; in this he introduced portraits of Lafayette and Colonel Tilghman. The picture was in commemoration of the surrender at Yorktown, and represents the continental army passing in review. This has not been engraved.

In the following year (1784), Peale painted to the order of the Governor of Virginia another whole length. This was intended to be used by the sculptor Houdon, in preparing his model for the statue ordered by the State; but arrangements were subsequently made, which enabled him to visit the country, and make an actual cast from the head, and measurements of the person of Washington himself. Peale in his letter dated Philadelphia, October 30, 1784, advising the Governor of its completion, and his purpose of sending it by the first vessel going to France, says: "Besides the view of York and Gloster as mentioned in a former letter, I have introduced on a near ground French and American officers with their colors displayed, and between them the British with their colors cased; these figures seem to tell the story at first sight, which the more distant could not. P. S. The price of a copy (sic) of Genl. Washington in large whole length is thirty guineas, and the packing case three dollars." It is not known what became of this picture.

In 1786 Peale painted a portrait of Washington, head-size, for his Gallery. This is the portrait referred to by his son Rembrandt in his lecture on "Washington and his Portraits," during the sittings for which he stood behind his father's chair.

The mezzotinto plate first described in the appended list, was executed in 1787. It has no particular artistic merit, but possesses considerable interest as an original work, although, in character and drawing, different from other originals familiar to us.

Peale painted fourteen portraits of Washington from life, the last in the autumn of 1795. This is now in the Gallery of the "New York Historical Society."

Charles Willson Peale died at Philadelphia February 22, 1827.

Quite a number of the prints in the following list executed by foreign engravers, are extremely unsatisfactory, as renderings of any of the Washington portraits painted by Peale. The miniature executed for Lafayette in 1778, was possibly the first portrait known abroad, and seems to have been at once taken hold of and either copied or used, as a groundwork, for the production of pictures calculated to please the popular taste. From these copies and pictures, engravings were made and repeated again and again, losing naturally in every step, the force and character of the original. This is proved by Lavater, who in his remarks upon the one published in the French edition of his Essay on Physiognomy, (afterwards copied by Holloway for the English edition and also by Zerlamsler,) says, "If Washington is the author of the revolution, we have seen him undertake and accomplish with so much success, it is positive that the designer must have lost some of the most striking features of the original." The outline by Halder in the same work, which resembles very closely the head in the print by Norman, seems to have, however, thoroughly satisfied the physiognomist, as he found in it all the characteristics which were wanting in the other.

The engraving by Le Mire, full length, is from a made-up picture; this is copied with slight variations in those published in England by Carington Bowles, and Laurie & Whittle, while the head appears in those executed by Angus, Cook, and J. L., and the one published by Thom. Hart. The engraving by Sharp, copied by Pruneau, and repeated as to the head, by Carey and Newton, and in the one published by Whitworth & Yates, was made from a print obtained in Paris, and altered to suit the fancy of the author of the work in which it appeared, each reproduction removing it further from the original print, and even that, may have been anything but a close rendering of Peale.

The print by Valentine Green, declared to be from an original picture, presents another type, which, in comparison with the whole length by Wolff, a close copy as regards the figure and accessories, of a known original, warrants the assertion that the picture from which it is said to have been made, was not by Peale.

The print by Norman, an early American engraver, published in 1782, will be found copied as to the head, in the St. Aubin, the one published in the Universal Magazine, and possibly in that by Vinkeles.

Dunlap in the appendix to his "History of the Arts of Design in the United States" mentions a whole length of Washington after C. W. Peale, as having been engraved by Robert Scott, an Englishman, who came to America about the year 1788, and settled in Philadelphia. No impression of this print, has come under the notice of the writer.

[Life of George Washington. By Washington Irving. New York 1856, '59.]

This is an error in the lettering. The miniature referred to, and from which the engraving was executed, was painted, according to a statement of Rembrandt Peale, in the year 1777, by his Father, Charles Willson Peale.

9. EDWIN.

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON BORN FEB. 22. 1732 IN WEST-MORELAND COUNTY VIRGINIA, AND DIED DEC. 14. 1799 AT MOUNT VERNON. Full Bust, Head to left. Stipple.

R. Peale Pinx. D. Edwin Sc.

Rare.

From the lettering of this Plate, it is usually considered to have been executed from the first portrait by Rembrandt Peale, painted at the age of seventeen. But this, we think, is an error, and if the engraving is a close rendering of its original, incline to the opinion that the lettering is incorrect, and that it is really after one of Charles Willson Peale's later Portraits.

Different from any other full length executed by Peale, and although ascribed to him by the lettering of the print, and as having been painted at Philadelphia, its authenticity is extremely doubtful.

engraved Portrait of Washington, executed by a professional engraver in America. The Mezzotinto by Peale, referred to in the text, as advertised for sale in 1780, although the first in point of time, must be considered in a different light, as Peale was not a professional engraver, the few plates he produced, six in number, being after his own designs.

Subsequently prefixed to "The Constitutions of the several Independent States of America &c, By the Rev. William Jackson London 1783," the date in the address altered to 1783, and with the addition, "by J. Stockdale Piccadilly." Although this is declared to have been engraved from an original Picture, certain allusions made to it at the time, which may be found in Doane's memoir of the author of the Epistle, the Rev. Charles Henry Wharton D.D. (Philadelphia 1834), would seem to indicate, that the picture was made up from a print, "front face Bust size," obtained from Paris, and that Benjamin West, who had been applied to for that purpose, may have executed it for the purpose of the engraver.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

ALTHOUGH the references on some of the prints in the appended list, claim the originals to have been "drawn from the Life by Alexander Campbell of Williamsburg in Virginia," yet in every sense they may be classed among the Fictitious Portraits. There is no record of any such painter or draughtsman, and Washington himself declared that he never saw Mr. Campbell. The presumption is that the portrait or portraits, for according to the prints there appear to have been two, one mounted, the other a three-quarter length (Nos. 46 and 49 in the list), and to which all bear more or less of a resemblance, were manufactured at the beginning of the revolutionary war, for some enterprising publisher either in London or on the Continent, for the express purpose of being engraved, in anticipation of a demand which it was felt must arise. Portraits of Gates, Putnam, Charles Lee, Sullivan, and other officers of the army, were published at the same time, forming sets, and apparently executed by the same engravers, with no better claim to authenticity.

They have, however, not been placed among the Fictitious, as they seem to have a distinct type of themselves, and are well known to the curious collector, the date of publication 1775 on the two mentioned above, assigning them to this chronological order. As only four of these prints bear the name of the engraver, the alphabetical arrangement has, in this case, been in a measure dispensed with, those which seem to have the closest resemblance, being consecutive. Very few of them possess much artistic merit; that published at Paris by "Esnauts et Rapilly," engraver unknown, being one of the best.

PIERRE EUGENE DU SIMITIERE.

PORTRAIT painter and designer, was born at Geneva in the first quarter of the eighteenth century, and after spending about ten years in the West Indies, travelling from island to island, practicing his art and collecting shells and botanical specimens, finally settled in Philadelphia in the early part of 1766.

Du Simitière was a man of considerable ingenuity, an active member and one of the officers of the "American Philosophical Society," and formed a Cabinet of Natural History, the "American Museum," which the Marquis de Chastellux visited when in Philadelphia, December, 1780, and speaks of as being greatly celebrated, and unrivalled in America. He also made a large collection of cotemporary historical matter, which is now in the possession of the Philadelphia Library Company. Pierre Eugène Du Simitière died at Philadelphia, October, 1784.

The earliest dated print in the appended list, published at Madrid in 1781, is inscribed as having been executed from an original drawn from life at Philadelphia, and the same statement is made on the one by Prevost, and on each of the set of thirteen profile portraits including a Washington, engraved by Reading and published at London in 1783. Beyond this, there appears to be no evidence that Washington sat to Du Simitière for this portrait, the first profile of him of which we have any knowledge, but the presumption is altogether in favor of the fact. The artist's recognised position in the community, would certainly obtain for him such a privilege, and it seems scarcely probable that a student of history and lover of nature, such as we know Du Simitière to have been, would think for a moment of manufacturing likenesses of the distinguished men of the day, and let them go out as if from life.

The year 1779 is given as the probable chronology, Washington having passed the greater part of the winter of 1778-79 in Philadelphia.

The profile by Du Simitière which is known to us only through the art of engraving, represents Washington in a military coat, with his hair carefully dressed and tied by a ribbon into a queue, and there is reason to suppose that it and the others included in the set above mentioned, were merely water color drawings neatly executed for the purpose of the engraver, and then, perhaps, laid aside and forgotten. While it may not strictly be termed an ordinary head, yet it reveals no particular force or ability, and represents rather a well-bred, courteous gentleman, neat in person, and mindful of all the amenities of life, an officer probably, but not a commander.

With the exception of the one by Ruotte, in which a little more firmness and decision is given to the head, nearly all the prints in the list, that by Brandi being most probably the prototype, bear a close resemblance to each other, and are well engraved.

WILLIAM DUNLAP.

PAINTER and author, was born at Perth Amboy, February 19, 1766. The family removed to New York in the spring of 1777, and without much previous instruction other than that derived from copying prints, and the observation of the few pictures accessible to him at the time, he commenced drawing portraits in crayon, when about sixteen years of age.

In the autumn of 1783, while visiting Mr. John Van Horne, who resided within a short distance of Washington's head-quarters at Rocky Hill, near Princeton, New Jersey, he drew the portraits of his host and hostess. These having been seen by the General, who frequently called at the house, and receiving his approbation, Mr. Van Horne requested him to sit to the young artist, to which he complied. Dunlap in his autobiography refers to it in the following manner: "This was a triumphant moment for a boy of seventeen; and it must be remembered that Washington had not then been 'hackneyed to the touches of painter's pencil;' I say a triumphant moment, but it was one of anxiety, fear, and trembling." He visited head-quarters frequently, also drawing the portrait of Mrs. Washington, and after taking copies for himself, presented the originals to Mr. and Mrs. Van Horne.

In the following year, Dunlap went to London to study painting under Benjamin West, remaining four years, and after his return, led a varied career, alternating through a long life between business, the studio, the stage, and literature. He wrote several plays (and appeared once upon the stage himself), a life of Brockden Brown, one of Cooke, a history of New Netherlands, and one of the American Theatre. He executed several large pictures, painted many portraits, travelling constantly for the purpose, and took an active part in establishing the "National Academy of Design," New York.

In old age, and under reduced circumstances, he compiled the "History of the rise and progress of the Arts of Design in the United States," which was published in 1834. William Dunlap died in New York, September 28, 1839.

We have but one engraving after this drawing, which, if not a fine example of mezzotinto, may be a good rendering of the original.

JOSEPH WRIGHT.

SON of Joseph Wright and Patience Lovell, was born at Bordentown, New Jersey, July 16, 1756. After the death of his father, his mother went with her family of three children to London, where, becoming famous for modelling in wax, she was enabled to give her son a good education. Turning his attention to portrait painting, he received advice and instruction from Benjamin West and John Hoppner, who married his sister, and previous to leaving England, had painted the portrait of the Prince of Wales, afterwards George the Fourth.

In the early part of 1782, being placed under the protection of Benjamin Franklin, he went to Paris for the purpose of prosecuting his studies in the art. He, however, remained but a short time, and being provided with letters from Franklin to General Washington, set sail in October of that year for the United States, which he reached after a perilous voyage of ten weeks, landing at Boston.

In the autumn of the following year, 1783, he painted the portrait of Washington, at his head-quarters, Rocky Hill, near Princeton, N. J., for which he had several sittings. A portrait of Washington, in possession of Mrs. Annie Hopkinson Foggo, of Philadelphia, a great-grand-daughter of Francis Hopkinson, is by Wright. It is a full bust, in Continental uniform, full face, the body turned to the left, the hair short and undressed. The pose is awkward, and while having no pretensions to artistic merit, conveys the impression of at least an earnest attempt on the part of the painter to reproduce that which was before him. It is in good preservation, painted on a mahogany panel 14 by 11 inches. This picture was owned by Francis Hopkinson, and has never been out of the family, and there is reason to suppose that it may be the one painted at Rocky Hill above mentioned. The print by O'Neill, No. 93, bears a slight resemblance to it.

In the winter of 1783-4, Wright, then in Philadelphia, painted another portrait of Washington, which, it appears by the following letter to him from the General, was intended as a present to Count de Solms. "Mt. Vernon, 10th Jan. 1784. Sir: When you have finished my portrait which is intended for the Count de Solms, I will thank you for handing it to Mr. Robert Morris, who will forward it to the Count de Bruhl (Minister from his Electoral Highness of Saxe at the Court of London), as the channel pointed out for the conveyance of it. As the Count de Solms proposes to honour it with a place in his collection of military characters, I am persuaded you will not be deficient in point of execution. Be so good as to forward the cost of it to me, and I will remit the money. Let it (after Mr. Morris has seen it) be carefully packed to prevent injury."

An authentic portrait by Wright, which was painted in Philadelphia for Mrs. Elizabeth Powel of that city, is now in the possession of her great-nephew, Mr. Samuel Powel, of Newport, R. I. It is a half-length, in uniform, life size, the right hand resting upon a sword, full face, the body turned to the right; signed and dated "J. Wright, 1784." Tuckerman, in referring to it in his work on "The Character and Portraits of Washington," says: "Perhaps no portrait of Washington bears such convincing marks of genuine individuality, without a particle of artistic flattery." This picture has not been engraved.

After Washington was inaugurated President, Wright was desirous of procuring another sitting, which was refused in consequence of the exacting cares and duties of the office. The artist, however, was determined on his purpose, and the President being a regular attendant at St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway, New York, where a canopied pew had been prepared for his reception, Wright obtained permission of the occupant of the one immediately opposite, to use that position for a Sunday morning or two to take a deliberate miniature profile likeness of him in crayon, as he sat entirely unconscious of the act. This he afterwards etched himself, with considerable taste and excellence of execution, and published it printed on a card. It is a profile bust in uniform, with the hair dressed and tied by a ribbon into a queue, and is well drawn; there is a quiet dignity about the head which is quite impressive, and it is altogether, an exceedingly interesting production. It seems to have been an accepted likeness, judging from the number of contemporary copies of it, and the certificate to that effect on the impression owned by Elkanah Watson, referred to below. This is the first print mentioned in the appended List.

Wright took a plaster cast of Washington's features at Mount Vernon in 1784, from which he seems to have modelled a bust, and from this, perhaps, those of his mother's in wax, which are well known, may have been taken. A wax bas-relief portrait of Washington in the possession of Benjamin R. Smith, of Philadelphia, executed by Wright for Thomas Richardson, of Newport, and which bears his name, in which the head is laureated, is quite striking and characteristic.

Upon the establishment of the Mint at Philadelphia, Wright was appointed draughtsman and die-sinker thereto, and it is probable that the first coins and medals executed in this country were his handiwork.

The Washington medal known as the "Manly Medal," published at Philadelphia in 1790, is supposed to be by him. Wright died shortly after his appointment, being carried off by the yellow fever of the year 1793.

Besides the original etching, and the copies of it more or less close, there will be found in the appended list two other and different types of portraits, both in uniform, one in full profile as engraved by Holloway, Murray, and Roosing, and the other in which the bust is in three-quarters, and the face in profile, engraved by Evans, Scoles, and others. We are unable to say from what pictures these were taken. The print by Evans, however, ascribes it to be after a drawing by Wright, while that by Holloway gives no artist's name; but if not directly after anything executed by Wright, was certainly imitated from him, and possesses enough of the characteristics of the Evans to entitle it and those resembling it to be classed therewith.

The print by Dawe presents an entirely different portrait, which it is extremely doubtful was ever painted by Wright. The figure is large and quite gross, the features coarse, and the whole appearance anything but pleasant. Its rarity is its only recommendation.

Themmen M.D. The following translation, is kindly furnished by Joseph W. Drexel the owner of the print:—

“Behold a speaking likeness of the allgreat hero,
Of the noblest of men; therefore approach reverentially,
Ye friends of mankind! and recognize in this father of his countrymen,
A Cato in council; a Cæsar in the field;
A second Solon, whene'er his country's interest is at stake;
A Hercules, if the state is threatened by boisterous winds,
Yet in peaceful times, but an humble farmer.
At once the dread of Albion, and her object of esteem.
A hero, knowing as well to fight desperately,
As to avoid by his skill, a useless sacrifice of blood.
A bulwark, before his land; an unclouded sun,
In its heroic crown; a quarter of the earth,
From the yoke of oppression, with skill and moderation he protected.
The best friend of the people: the great Washington.”

Drawn by N. Fullerton. Engraved by G. G. Smith. "Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1851, by Charles Fox in the Clerks Office of the District Court of Massachusetts."

[A Portrait of George Washington from an original Drawing. A History of the Portrait, &c. By Charles Fox. Boston 1851.]

The writer of the pamphlet to which this print is prefixed, declares that it was executed, from "A Portrait of George Washington, as he appeared while reviewing the Continental Army on Boston Common in 1776," drawn by Nathaniel Fullerton, a young Artist of that city. The pamphlet, was published, "To rescue from oblivion a Portrait which, in the opinion of competent judges, is a remarkable likeness of the Father of his Country," and contains Certificates as to its correctness in that respect, by a number of persons who had seen Washington in Boston, in the years 1776 and 1789. As to the latter statement, we have but little doubt, feeling quite certain that the drawing from which the engraving was made, was a copy of the original etching by Joseph Wright, to which Fullerton had affixed his name, without any thought of claiming it for an original work, as the etching at the time of its publication (1790), seems to have been well known in the Eastern States. A comparison of the etching and engraving, leaves no room to doubt, that this, is the true version of the matter, and that the Title of the print, is manifestly incorrect.

G. WASHINGTON. BORN VIRGINIA FEB^RY 11TH 1732 GENERAL OF THE AMERICAN ARMIES 1775 RESIGNED 1783 PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES 1789. Full Bust in uniform, in profile to left. Title, in a ribbon on the arm. Circle. Stipple.

Diameter 3 9-16 inches.

A cotemporary print, and possibly a free copy of the head in the "Manly Medal," supposed to be by Wright. It is rather a crude effort, and only one impression of the original state, has come under the notice of the writer. The plate is still in existence, having been entirely worked over, the Title removed from the arm, and engraved in much larger letters in the upper margin. The impressions from the altered plate, all taken comparatively recently, are well known to collectors.

ROBERT EDGE PINE.

SON of John Pine, engraver, was born in London in the year 1742. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he gained the first premium offered by the Society for the encouragement of Arts, for the best historical picture painted in oil, figures life size, in 1760, and for the second time in the year 1762.

He afterwards practiced as a portrait painter both in London and Bath, and was considered a good colorist. Many of his theatrical portraits were engraved by McArdell, Valentine Green, Watson, and others, and were very popular.

Pine came to America in the year 1783, for the purpose of painting portraits of the heroes and patriots of the Revolution, in order to combine them in historical pictures commemorating the events of that period. He made his residence in Philadelphia, having brought letters of introduction to the Hon. Francis Hopkinson, whose portrait was the first he painted in this country. It was the letter of that gentleman to Washington, explaining Pine's design of collecting portraits for historical pictures, and requesting him to sit to the artist, which drew out the celebrated letter dated Mt. Vernon 16th May, 1785. "In for a penny, in for a pound, is an old adage. I am so hackneyed to the touches of the Painter's pencil, that I am now altogether at their beck, and sit like patience on a monument whilst they are delineating the lines of my face. It is a proof among many others of what habit and custom can effect. At first I was as impatient at the request, and as restive under the operation, as a colt is of the saddle. The next time I submitted very reluctantly, but with less flouncing. Now no dray moves more readily to the Thill, than I do to the Painter's Chair. It may easily be conceived therefore that I yielded a ready obedience to your request, and to the views of Mr. Pine. Letters from England, recommendatory of this Gentleman, came to my hand previous to his arrival in America, not only as an Artist of acknowledged eminence, but as one who had discovered a friendly disposition towards this country, for which, it seems he had been marked."

Pine remained three weeks at Mt. Vernon, and besides that of Washington, painted also the portraits of Mrs. Washington's Grandchildren. He executed quite a number of portraits in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Annapolis, and in different parts of Virginia, all of which are held in high esteem, but his project of painting the historical pictures was never fully carried out.

Robert Edge Pine died at Philadelphia, November 19, 1788. His family, a widow and daughters, returned to England.

We have but two engravings of this portrait, one by H. B. Hall en vignette from the original picture, and the other by G. R. Hall taken from an ornamental design by A. Chappel, the head being surrounded by different objects referring to the civil and military history of Washington, as well as national allusions. The first named print, is the most satisfactory as a transcript of the painting.

JEAN ANTOINE HOUDON.

WAS born at Versailles, March 20th, 1741. Having gained the first prize for Sculpture in the Royal Academy at Paris (1760), he visited Italy, where he passed ten years in the study of the Antique. After his return to Paris he was admitted to the Academy, and soon occupied a prominent position in his art.

In June, 1784, the General Assembly of Virginia passed a resolution, "That the Executive be requested to take measures for procuring a statue of General Washington, to be of the finest marble and best workmanship." In pursuance of this request, Governor Harrison commissioned Charles Willson Peale, to draw a full length picture of the General, directing him, when finished, to forward it to Paris, to the address of Thomas Jefferson, at that time a minister plenipotentiary with Adams and Franklin, to negotiate treaties of commerce with foreign nations.

The picture was painted and forwarded by the artist towards the end of the year, but Houdon, with whom Jefferson had contracted for its execution, was unwilling to undertake the statue without seeing Washington, and in consequence, arrangements were made for his doing so. He came to the United States in the same vessel with Dr. Franklin, arriving in Philadelphia in September of the following year.

Houdon reached Mt. Vernon the third day of October, and remained two weeks, during which time he made a cast of the face, from which a bust was modelled, and took minute measurements of the person of Washington. He returned to Paris about the first of January, 1786, and the statue was completed in 1788, but the new Capitol at Richmond, in which provision was to be made for its reception, not being finished, it was detained in France to await that event. It was placed in position May 14th, 1796.

The Statue is of the exact size of life, six feet two inches in height, of fine Italian marble. The costume is the military dress of the Revolution. The right hand of the General rests upon a staff, the left is upon the folds of a military cloak thrown over the end of a bundle of fasces, with which are connected a sword and plough.

The inscription on the pedestal, which was written by James Madison, is as follows: "The General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia have caused this Statue to be erected as a monument of affection and gratitude to George Washington, who, uniting to the endowments of the Hero, the virtues of the Patriot, and exerting both in establishing the liberties of his country, has rendered his name dear to his fellow-citizens, and given the world an immortal Example of true Glory."

The figure has been pronounced by Lafayette "a fac-simile of Washington's Person," while the bust, simple, yet dignified, grand, but full of humanity, is the acknowledged likeness, and stamped by Stuart, as the ideal of the great original.

Jean Antoine Houdon died at Paris, July 15, 1828.

Our List of prints includes but one of the Statue, and that executed from a daguerreotype, is neither very satisfactory as an engraving, nor faithful to the original. The bust, however, has been well engraved, and in the plates by Leney, and Durand, all the fine character, truth, and dignity of this master piece are preserved. The print by Tardieu, which is now difficult to obtain, it having become very scarce outside of early collections, is a beautiful example of engraving. But perhaps the most interesting one, is that executed by an unknown hand in the stipple manner, in imitation of a crayon sketch, No. 109. It is peculiarly free and easy in the drawing, striking in expression, and the whole character of the head and work, indicates the master hand.

JAMES PEALE.

MINIATURE Painter, was a younger brother and pupil of Charles Willson Peale. He painted two original miniatures of Washington, the first, according to the date on the engraving of it by H. B. Hall, in the year 1788, and the other, in 1795. The former one, now in possession of the Washington Grays, (artillery corps,) of Philadelphia, resembles the head by Pine. Of the latter, we have no information, other than the statement by his nephew Rembrandt, that his uncle James, during the second and third sittings, accorded to him by Washington in the autumn of 1795, painted at his left hand, a miniature on ivory.

Mr. Peale also painted in oil. In the year 1786, his brother executed a portrait of Washington from life, for his Gallery. This portrait, James copied on a larger canvas, and added the figure in military costume, with an attendant and horse in the background. The picture, is in the possession of James Lenox Esqr. of New York, and is the one engraved by John Sartain, No. 112.

James Peale died at Philadelphia, in May, 1831, in the eighty second year of his age.

MADAME DE BREHAN.

SISTER of the Count de Moustier the French Minister to the United States, an accomplished writer and skilful amateur artist, accompanied her brother to this country, and passed a few days at Mt. Vernon in the autumn of 1788. She was a great admirer of Washington, and on the evening of the day of his inauguration as first President of the United States, (April 30, 1789,) the front of her brother's house in New York, was beautifully decorated with paintings by her own hand, suggestive of the past, the present, and the future in American History, which were illuminated by borderings of lamps upon the doors and windows.

Washington gave her a sitting, as appears by the following entry in his Diary: "Saturday, 3d. (October, 1789.) Walked in the afternoon, and sat about two o'clock for Madam de Brehan, to complete a miniature profile of me, which she had begun from memory, and which she had made exceedingly like the original."*

Madame de Brehan returned to France with her brother shortly afterwards, the President making an informal visit upon them for the purpose of taking leave, on the 14th of the same month. After their return, the Count had an engraving made from the original, proofs of which were sent by him to Washington, in May of the following year. One of these proof impressions, was presented by Washington to Mrs. Robert Morris, a grand-daughter of whom, in turn, presented it shortly after the battle of Antietam (1862), to General George B. McClellan. It was from this impression, that the engraving by Burt was executed.

* The previous entry of this day is as follows: "Sat for Mr. Rammage near two hours to day, who was drawing a miniature picture of me for Mrs. Washington." This Portrait has not been engraved, and the whereabouts of the original is unknown.

Madame de Brehan also painted on copper in medallion form, the profiles of Washington and Lafayette accolated, and presented the picture to Mrs. Washington, after making a copy for herself. This is no doubt the medallion alluded to, in the Count's letter to Washington, of May 11, 1790, in which he refers also to sending the proof impressions of the prints. No engraving of this medallion has been executed; it has, however, been reproduced on wood, for "The Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution," and "The Home of Washington and its associations," by Benson J. Lossing.

Our list furnishes two engravings of the De Brehan miniature, those by Roger and Burt. The latter, a recent production, engraved as stated, from the proof impression presented by Washington to Mrs. Morris, varies somewhat from the former, the profile possessing more of the Houdon feeling, thus giving a head quite striking and characteristic. The print from which it was copied, we have been unable to see, nor do we know by whom it was executed.

The head by Roger, in reverse from the one by Burt, while not as manly in expression, and a little too much in the poetic order, is nevertheless an exceedingly interesting profile. Both of these prints are well engraved, and fill a valuable niche in a Washington collection.

CHRISTIAN GULAGER.

WAS born at Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1759. He seems to have turned his attention to art at an early age, receiving, when but seventeen years old, the prize medal of the Royal Academy of his native city, for painting and drawing, which carried with it the privilege of travelling for three years through Europe, at the King's expense, for the study of art.

Gulager came to America when about twenty-two years of age, settling in Boston, where he married and prosecuted portrait painting, opening a gallery for the exhibition of his own and other paintings, which is said to have occupied, an important place in the community.

When Washington visited Boston as President, on his eastern tour, in October, 1789, Gulager in the words of the Rev. Jeremy Belknap, "stole a likeness of him from a pew behind the pulpit," in King's Chapel, while listening to an oratorio performed in his honor. Not satisfied with this, it was made in pencil, the artist followed the Presidential party to Portsmouth, N. H., where, according to the following entry in Washington's Diary, he had a better opportunity, being accorded a regular sitting. "Tuesday, 3d. (Nov.) Sat two hours in the forenoon for a Mr. —, Painter of Boston, at the request of M. Brick of that place; who wrote Maj. Jackson, that it was an earnest desire of many inhabitants of that town that he might be indulged."

Dr. Belknap, in referring to this incident, says: "He obtained a very good likeness; after which he laid aside the sketch which he took in the chapel; which, however, was not a bad one." This portrait, became the property of Daniel Sargent, Jr., who afterwards presented it to Dr. Belknap. At the time of its being engraved by Marshall, it was in the possession of a grandson, Edward Belknap; it is now owned by a great-grand-daughter, Mrs. Arthur Codman, of Bristol, R. I.

Christian Gulager left Boston in 1791, and after living in New York about nine years, went to Philadelphia, where he died in 1827.

The only engraving we have of this portrait, is the one by Marshall, which is well executed, and is said to be an excellent rendering of the original. The head, which is rather awkwardly drawn, possesses in general effect, some of the characteristics of the Savage, more noticeable in the print in that list, by an unknown engraver, inscribed as being from an original miniature in the possession of Benjamin Smith of Philadelphia.

EDWARD SAVAGE.

PAINTER and Engraver, in the Mezzotinto and Stipple manner, was born at Princeton, Mass., in the year 1761. His original calling was that of a goldsmith, which, however, he relinquished for portrait painting and engraving.

Having offered to execute a portrait of Washington as a gift to Harvard College, to be placed in the Philosophy Chamber, the President, at the request of that Institution, sat to him in the city of New York, three times, as appears by the following entries in his diary.

“Monday 21st. (Dec. 1789.) Sat from ten to one o'clock for a Mr. Savage, to draw my Portrait for the University of Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts, at the request of the President and Governors of the said University.”

“Monday 28th. Sat all the forenoon for Mr. Savage, who was taking my portrait.”

“Wednesday 6th. (Jany. 1790.) Sat from half after 8 o'clock till 10 for the portrait painter, Mr. Savage, to finish the picture of me which he had begun for the University of Cambridge.”

This Portrait, afterwards engraved by the artist himself in the Stipple manner, the first mentioned in the appended list, is still preserved in the collection of the college, and is described in the Catalogue as follows: “No. 4. GEO: WASHINGTON, b. 1732. d. 1799—L. L. D. 1776.

Artist, Edward Savage, 1790—Donor, Edward Savage, 1792—Presdt. United States, 1789–1797. First L. L. D. of Harvard College.” The contemporary record of the Institution, dated August 30, 1791, also possesses some interest. “Voted. That the thanks of this Corporation be given to Mr. Edward Savage, for his polite and generous attention to this University, in painting a portrait of the President of the United States, taken by him from the life; and that Mr. Savage’s brother, be requested to transmit to him this vote.”

Savage went abroad the following year, and studied for a time in London, under Benjamin West, and afterwards visited Italy. He subsequently practiced at Philadelphia and New York. Edward Savage, died at his native place in July, 1817.

An examination of the prints bearing the name of E. Savage as painter and engraver, leads to the conclusion that the statements made by William Dunlap, in his sketch of the artist (Arts of Design Vol 1 pa 321), and which were evidently furnished by that erratic genius, John Wesley Jarvis, a pupil of Savage’s, are manifestly incorrect. The assertion that David Edwin was the real engraver of these works, is proved to be an error, from the fact, that the first and third mentioned prints in the list, were published in London, respectively, in the years 1792 and 1793, and that Edwin was not known as an engraver, until his arrival in Philadelphia in December, 1797, being then about twenty-one years of age. Moreover, one is executed in Mezzotinto, a method which he never practiced, and the other, although in Stipple, is entirely different in manner from that of Edwin, whose style is well known.

What works Jarvis refers to, when he says “that he made all his masters pictures, engraved them, printed them, and delivered them to customers," is not apparent, for besides those enumerated below, no other prints bearing the name of Savage as painter and engraver, are known (at least to the writer), except one of General Knox, published in London, Dec. 1791, executed in the Stipple manner. The statement, that Edwin engraved "The Washington Family," published in 1798, and that Jarvis assisted him is also made, but the work resembles closely the head of 1792, and although in some respects, the drawing is open to criticism, yet it is a well executed print.

The portrait of Washington, as given in these prints, possesses an air of truthfulness and individuality, which warrants the assertion, that the artist was faithful to his original, and in sympathy with a character whose dignity he felt, so far as was in his power, must be preserved. The first described print, is from the picture painted in New York for the college, a military portrait, and the one executed in Mezzotinto, representing Washington as President, in full dress, examining a plan of the city of Washington, exists only as an engraving, no painting of it being known. Both are well engraved.

All the prints in the following list, with the exception of that by Bertonnier, and the one published by Rymer, engraver unknown, are copies of the plates engraved by Savage as above mentioned, those executed by Hamlin, from the Mezzotinto full three quarter length, varying in certain accessories, from the original. The head by Bertonnier, is probably from Savage, although in passing through the French crucible, it has become slightly transformed. The print published by Rymer, London, 1794, said to be taken from an original miniature in the possession of Benjamin Smith of Philadelphia, gives us a head, quite different in drawing and pose from the Savage, but the general characteristics are such, as to warrant the belief, that it must have been modelled to a great extent from his work.

The list presents but three prints executed by foreign engravers, all the rest being by Americans.

JOHN TRUMBULL.

1790-93.

SON of Jonathan Trumbull, the revolutionary Governor of Connecticut, was born at Lebanon in that State, June 6, 1756. He received an excellent education, showing great facility in acquiring knowledge, particularly of languages, and graduated at Harvard College in July, 1773. At an early age a taste for drawing developed itself, and while at Cambridge, he copied a print after Coypel, which was shown to Copley, and commended by him.

Upon his return to Lebanon, he turned his attention to painting, but the mutterings of coming revolution exciting his enthusiasm, the palette was abandoned, and he became interested in military studies and exercises, entering the army as adjutant to the 1st Connecticut Regiment. He marched to Boston in May, 1775, and was stationed at Roxbury.

Understanding, that Washington was desirous of obtaining a correct plan, of the enemy's works on Boston Neck, the young adjutant commenced one, but the desertion of a British Artillery-man, who brought out with him a rude plan of the entire works, prevented its being finished. Trumbull's drawing, however, was shown to the Commander-in-Chief, and attracted notice, in consequence of its correctness. He was soon after appointed aid-de-camp, and subsequently Major of Brigade.

In the following year, he accompanied the northern expedition under Gates, as adjutant, with the rank of Colonel, but becoming dissatisfied with the date of his commission, left the service in February, 1777, and returned to Lebanon; he afterwards went to Boston, to profit by studying the works of Copley and others, and while there, occupied the room which had been built by Smybert, in which remained many of his works.

In May, 1780, he sailed for Europe, being anxious to receive the benefit of instruction from Benjamin West, and after a short stay in Paris, reached London in the following August.

Mr. Trumbull has left us a list of drawings and pictures, (68 in number,) executed prior to his departure, which includes one, described as, "Gen. Washington, half length, from memory." He immediately went to work under West, who received him very kindly, but upon the receipt of the news of the death of Major Andre, he was arrested and committed to prison. His life was spared at the intercession of West, then high in favor with the King, but he remained confined for seven months, when he was liberated, on condition of quitting the kingdom within thirty days, West and Copley becoming his sureties. He proceeded to Amsterdam, and reached home in January 1782.

In the following November, Trumbull again embarked for England, where he pursued his studies indefatigably under Mr. West, remaining until the latter part of 1789, during which time, he painted his "Battle of Bunker Hill," and "Death of Montgomery," and arranged the compositions, for "The Declaration of Independence," "The Surrender of Cornwallis," and the Battles of Trenton and Princeton. He arrived at New York, Nov 26, 1789, and soon after, commenced painting portraits, to be introduced in these Historical pictures.

Washington sat to him seven times for this purpose, as appears by the following entries in his diary, and also rode with him upon one occasion, in order that the artist should see him mounted.

Wednesday, 10th. (Feby. 1790). Sat from 9 until 11 o'clock for Mr. Trumbull, to draw my picture in his historical pieces.

Friday, 12th. Sat from 9 o'clock until 11, for Mr. John Trumbull, for the purpose of drawing my picture.

Monday, 15th. Sat between 9 and 11, for Mr. John Trumbull.

Thursday, 18th. Sat for Mr. Trumbull from 9 o'clock till 10.

Saturday, 20th. Sat from 9 until 11, for Mr. Trumbull.

Saturday, 27th. Sat for Mr. Trumbull this forenoon.

March, 1790. Monday, 1st. Exercised on horseback this forenoon, attended by Mr. John Trumbull, who wanted to see me mounted.

Thursday, 4th. Sat from 9 until half after 10 o'clock for Mr. Trumbull.

In the summer of that year (1790), Trumbull painted for the city of New York, a full length portrait of Washington. This picture, which has not been engraved, is now in the Mayor's Office in the City Hall.

The artist, describes it in his autobiography as follows: "I represented him in full uniform, standing by a white horse, leaning his arm upon the saddle; in the background a view of Broadway in ruins, as it then was, the old fort at the termination; British ships and boats, leaving the shore, with the last of the officers and troops of the evacuating army, and Staten Island in the distance. Every part of the detail of the dress, horse, furniture, etc., as well as the scenery, was accurately copied from the real objects."

The full length painted by Trumbull, now in the "Yale School of Fine Arts," at New Haven, and so well known through the engravings of it by Cheesman and Warner, was painted in Philadelphia. Its history, is also furnished us by the artist. "In 1792 I was again in Philadelphia, and there painted the portrait of General Washington, which is now placed in the gallery at New Haven, the best certainly of those which I painted, and the best, in my estimation, which exists, in his heroic military character. The city of Charleston, S. C., instructed William R. Smith, one of the representatives of South Carolina, to employ me to paint for them a portrait of the great man, and I undertook it con amore (as the commission was unlimited), meaning to give his military character, in the most sublime moment of its exertion—the evening previous to the battle of Princeton; when viewing the vast superiority of his approaching enemy, and the impossibility of again crossing the Delaware, or retreating down the river, he conceives the plan of returning by a night march, into the country from which he had just been driven, thus cutting off the enemy's communication, and destroying his depot of stores and provisions at Brunswick. I told the President my object; he entered into it warmly, and, as the work advanced, we talked of the scene, its dangers, its almost desperation. He looked the scene again, and I happily transferred to the canvas, the lofty expression of his animated countenance, the high resolve to conquer or to perish. The result was in my own opinion eminently successful, and the general was satisfied. But it did not meet the views of Mr. Smith. He admired, he was personally pleased, but he thought the city would be better satisfied with a more matter-of-fact likeness, such as they had recently seen him—calm, tranquil, peaceful.

“Oppressed as the President was with business, I was reluctant to ask him to sit again. I however waited upon him, stated Mr. Smith’s objection, and he cheerfully submitted to a second penance, adding, ‘Keep this picture for yourself, Mr. Trumbull, and finish it to your own taste.’ I did so—another was painted for Charleston agreeable to their taste—a view of the city in the background, a horse, with scenery, and plants of the climate; and when the State Society of Cincinnati of Connecticut dissolved themselves, the first picture, at the expense of some of the members, was presented to Yale College.”

Besides the portraits introduced in his historical pictures of “Trenton,” “Princeton,” “Surrender of Cornwallis,” and “The Resignation at Annapolis,” he painted in Philadelphia, in May, 1793, a head, the size of life; this is in the collection at New Haven. When the Hon. John Jay was appointed in 1794, envoy extraordinary to Great Britain, to negotiate a treaty of peace and commerce between the two nations, Trumbull accompanied him as secretary, and was afterwards appointed the fifth commissioner, to carry into execution the seventh article of the treaty. He returned to the United States in 1804, and resumed his pencil in New York. After another visit to London, of some duration, he finally returned to his native country in 1816.

The Trumbull collection, now in the building of “The Yale School of Fine Arts,” Yale College, New Haven, contains Fifty-five pictures painted by him, conveyed to the College, December 19, 1831, in consideration of an annuity of one thousand dollars, to be paid during his natural life, and certain other stipulations as to their use and preservation.

Colonel Trumbull was President of the “American Academy of the Fine Arts," for nine years, from 1816 to 1825. He died at New York, on the tenth day of November, 1843.

Trumbull makes no allusion in his autobiography, to the picture engraved by Valentine Green. According to the inscription of the print, it was published in 1781, the picture having been painted the previous year. The artist reached London on his first visit, in August, 1780, and lay there in prison, from November to June, of the following year. Upon his release he went to Amsterdam, and visited M. De Neufville (stated on the print to have been the owner of the painting), at whose house he resided until August, when he left for America, reaching home in June, 1782. The print must have been known to him, and the presumption is, that he painted the picture to please M. De Neufville, but was unwilling to acknowledge it. If executed by him, the measurements of the engraver being probably correct, it establishes one fact, that the former Aid placed a sufficiently high standard, upon his Commander-in-Chief. The head in this print, resembles Peale.

The figure, is repeated in the print by Misa, and in the one by an unknown engraver, bearing the additional title "Marshal of France," which appears on no other engraved portrait of Washington, and the head alone, in the print by Sherwin. The plate by Le Roy, is an exact copy of the Valentine Green. The print by Monin, is probably a variation of the full length, painted for the city of Charleston, some of the details, agreeing with the description of that picture, given by the painter himself.

With these exceptions, and the one by Blanchard, the engravings in the list, are all fair renderings of the Trumbull Portrait, at New Haven. The whole picture, is best known through the excellent print by Cheesman, which is said to have been engraved, under the superintendence of the artist himself, and the one by Warner, published in Philadelphia. The head by Durand, is a beautiful example of the burin, and the plate by H. B. Hall, engraved from a pencil sketch (Trumbull was peculiarly successful in this way), is one of that engraver's best efforts, and very satisfactory.

The print by Blanchard, in which a military cloak is thrown around the shoulders, is among the best engraved Washington portraits, but in expression, particularly noticeable about the mouth and eyes, is not very close to the original. It was engraved from a drawing by Couder, who seems to have taken some liberties with Trumbull.

ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON.

WAS born near Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1765. He showed an early disposition for art, and after receiving a collegiate education, went to Edinburgh, in 1782, to study painting, associating himself with Raeburn, (afterwards so justly celebrated as a portrait painter), and some others, for the purpose of mutual improvement. After practicing his art in Aberdeen and Edinburgh, he went to London in 1788, and under the advice of Sir Joshua Reynolds, then President of the Royal Academy, gained admission to the schools. He afterwards returned to Scotland, and pursued his profession with success.

Being solicited to settle in America, he determined to come to the United States, and landed at New York on the second day of October, 1791.

In the month of December following, Robertson visited Philadelphia, then the seat of government, to deliver to President Washington, from the Earl of Buchan, the celebrated box made from the wood of the oak tree, which sheltered Sir William Wallace after his defeat at the battle of Falkirk, which had been intrusted to him for that purpose. In the letter presenting the box and introducing Mr. Robertson, the Earl requested that His Excellency would have the goodness to send him his portrait, that he might place it among those he most honored, and that he would like it to be from the pencil of Mr. Robertson.

The President, in compliance with this request, sat to Mr. Robertson for a miniature, on the afternoon of December 13, 1791, which was finished in January of the following year. From this, a large picture was painted in oil for the Earl, and transmitted to him, Washington referring to that fact in a letter to the Earl, dated May 1, 1792, in which he says, "The manner of the execution of it does no discredit I am told to the artist, of whose skill favorable mention has been made to me." The artist retained the miniature.

Mr. Robertson made New York his permanent residence, and followed his profession successfully for many years, confining himself to water colors and crayons, having found oil painting injurious to his health. He died at an advanced age.

Of the five prints included in the following list, only one, that by Dudensing, is inscribed as being after the Robertson miniature, the others, all by foreign engravers, while not presenting precisely the same portrait, bear some resemblance to it, and to each other, and are therefore classed therewith.

GIUSEPPE CERACCHI.

WAS born in Corsica about the year 1740, and when quite a youth, went to Rome to become a sculptor, studying under Canova. He attained a high rank in the art, and was employed by the Pope in conjunction with his master, in designing and executing works for the Pantheon.

In 1772, Ceracchi visited London and was well received, executing among others, a bust of Sir Joshua Reynolds then President of the Royal Academy.

An ardent Republican, Ceracchi conceived the design of executing a monument to Liberty in America, and for this purpose crossed the Atlantic. He arrived at Philadelphia in the year 1791, and prepared the model of a great work, designed to be one hundred feet in height, of statuary marble, and the cost was estimated at thirty thousand dollars. Washington favored the design, but Congress however did not feel itself authorized to expend money in such a manner, and the sculptor was disappointed.

Ceracchi modelled a bust of Washington from life. This head, although rather severe in style, is claimed to be an admirable representation of the hero, and the man. The mouth, is particularly remarked for its fidelity of expression.

It was purchased by the Spanish Ambassador as a gift to the Prince of Peace, then at the height of his power at Madrid; before the bust reached Spain, Godoy was exiled, and the minister recalled, who on his arrival transferred it to Richard Meade Esqr. of Philadelphia, in whose family it remained until 1857, when it was purchased by Gouverneur Kemble of New York. He also repeated it in colossal size, a cast of which, was for a long time, in the New York Academy of Fine Arts.

Ceracchi returned to Europe in 1795. He entered into a conspiracy against Napoleon, was detected, and guillotined on the thirtieth day of January 1802.

We have but two prints after this Bust, those by Prud'homme and H. B. Hall, the latter being the most characteristic, and the best known.

 WILLIAMS.

ON the second day of July 1792, Mr. Williams, (his Christian name is not given), presented to the First President, a letter of introduction from Henry Lee Governor of Virginia, favoring a desire on the part of the bearer, to paint the portrait of His Excellency. This, Washington refused, as appears by the following letter to the Governor dated at Philadelphia the following day, (July 3rd).

“Dear Sir. Your letter of the 20th ultimo was presented to me yesterday by Mr. Williams, who as a professional man may or may not be for aught I know, a luminary of the first magnitude. But to be frank, and I hope you will not be displeased with me for being so, I am so heartily tired of the attendance, which, from one cause or another has been given to these people, that it is now more than two years since I have resolved to sit no more for any of them, and have adhered to it, except in instances where it has been requested by public bodies or for a particular purpose (not of the painters), and could not without offence be refused. I have been led to make this resolution for another reason, besides the irksomeness of sitting, and the time I lose by it, which is, that these productions have in my estimation been made use of as a sort of tax on individuals, by being engraved, and that badly, and hawked about or advertised for sale.”

Mr. Williams however persevered in his purpose, and acting upon the hint conveyed in the above quoted letter, offered to compliment the Alexandria Washington Lodge, (Masonic), No. 22, with a Portrait of the President, provided they would make application to him, for that purpose. This offer was brought before the Lodge at a meeting held August 29, 1793, and being received with favor, the application was ordered to be made.

Being thus armed, Mr. Williams met with better success than in his first effort, as appears by the following extract from the records of the Lodge, October 25, 1794. "Mr. Williams having offered to the Lodge a drawing of our worthy Brother George Washington President of the United States, the same is received, and in consequence of the trouble and expense Mr. Williams was at in going to and coming from Philadelphia, it is proposed that the members of the Lodge pay him Fifty Dollars, to be raised by voluntary subscription."

The artist, not satisfied with this amount, asked in the following month for further compensation, which however was refused, the Lodge considering the Fifty Dollars in the light of a gratuity, inasmuch as the application to the President was made at the request of Mr. Williams, who proposed should it be successful, to compliment them with the portrait, promising himself great pecuniary advantage by the sale of copies.

This portrait, which is inscribed on the back of the canvas, "His Excellency George Washington Esquire President of the United States, aged 64—Williams Pinxit ad vivum in Philadelphia, September 18, 1794," is in possession of the Alexandria Washington Lodge, No. 22, and was engraved for a frontispiece to a work by Sidney Hayden, entitled, "Washington and his Masonic Compeers," from which we make the quotations.

This Masonic portrait, which represents Washington with the collar and jewel of a Past Master, if fairly rendered in the print by O'Neill, is such a feeble attempt almost amounting to a caricature, that we are not surprised at the refusal of the Lodge to pay the painter of it, any thing more than his travelling expenses. However valuable it may be in the estimation of the order, the knowledge of such a production should have remained among the arcana of the Lodge Room, and it is to be regretted, that it was thought proper to engrave it.

WALTER ROBERTSON.

WHO, according to Dunlap, was an Irish gentleman, came to America in the same vessel with Gilbert Stuart upon his return in 1793, landing at New York.

Robertson went to Philadelphia in advance of Stuart, and painted a miniature of Washington, which Robert Field, a miniature painter as well as an engraver, refers to in a letter to Robert Gilmore of Baltimore, dated Philadelphia, January 13, 1795, as follows: "Mr. Robertson's miniature of the President is as good a likeness and as fine a piece of painting as I ever saw. I have engaged to engrave it the same size with some ornaments to surround and make it more interesting, but as Mr. R. is determined to go to India early in the summer, he has declined the large plate, and offers to sell me the picture, which I should be glad to purchase, if the price he asks was not so extravagant, (viz. 1000 Dolls.) tho' it might be worth while even on those terms, if it was in my power. I have assistance offered me, but am fearful to engage so largely."

Dunlap, in speaking of Robertson, doubts whether Washington sat for this portrait, one reason being given that he is represented with a black stock, an article of dress which he affirms, Washington never wore, but besides the positive assertion that it was a good likeness and well painted, the tone of Field's letter indicates that he considered it an original.

This miniature, only known to us through the engraving by Field, represents Washington in uniform with a black neckerchief, the coat drawn together by a single button. The head is well drawn, the face full and rounded, and in some respects it resembles the last portrait by the elder Peale, painted in the autumn of 1795. The engraving is well executed, the ornamentation for the plate being designed by J. J. Barralet, an eccentric fellow countryman of Robertson's residing in Philadelphia.

Robertson subsequently went to the East Indies, where he died.

Robert Field the engraver of this print, an Englishman by birth, was an excellent miniature painter. He painted two copies of Stuart's first portrait of Washington, which are admirable examples of the art. One of these, was presented by Mrs. Washington, after the decease of her husband, to Tobias Lear his private Secretary; it is now in possession of his grand-daughter, Mrs. Wilson Eyre, of Newport, and the other, which was painted for Thomas Meredith, son of Samuel Meredith, first Treasurer of the United States, is now owned by Charles C. Moreau, of New York. Field practiced in Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and was at Mt. Vernon in 1798. He went to Canada about the commencement of the century, studied theology, was ordained a priest of the established church, and finally became a Bishop.

The prints by Houston and Tisdale in the following list, vary considerably from the one by Field, but although much changed, they appear to be founded on it; that by Tisdale omits the black neckerchief. The others are copies of the Field.

SAMUEL FOLWELL.

MINIATURE Painter, of whom little is known, was practicing his art in Philadelphia, the latter part of the last, and the beginning of the present century. The Profile of Washington in the possession of the "Historical Society of Pennsylvania," inscribed S. Folwell Pinxt. 1795, is said to have been taken upon a public occasion, the President being unaware of the fact. It is drawn on paper, and solidly painted in India ink, with certain lights touched in, and as declared at the time, is certainly a most spirited and correct likeness.

There is no engraving of this profile, but it has been reproduced on wood the same size as the original, height 3 12-16 inches, width 2 2-16 inches, Vignette, and published in "Annals and occurrences of New York City and State in the olden time," by John F. Watson. (Philadelphia 1846.)

ADOLPH ULRIC WERTMULLER.

Portrait and figure painter, a native of Sweden, was born at Stockholm, about the year 1750, and after acquiring the rudiments of art at home, went to Paris, where he studied and pursued his profession for several years.

He gained considerable reputation, was elected a member of the Royal Academies of sculpture and painting, at Paris and Stockholm, and accumulated a respectable fortune, a greater part of which, was however lost in the financial troubles, of the early part of the French revolution.

Wertmuller came to America in May, 1794, landing at Philadelphia, where he was well received. Some time during the following year, although a member of the family has questioned and indeed almost positively denied the statement, Washington is said to have given him a single sitting. This portrait, of which the artist made several copies, afterwards came into the possession of Mr. Cazenove, a Swiss gentleman, who carried it with him upon his return to his native country. At the time of its being engraved by Hall it was owned by Charles Augustus Davis of New York, since deceased, who had purchased it a short time previous, from the grand-daughter of Mr. Cazenove.

Wertmuller remained in this country until the autumn of 1796, when he returned to his native place, remaining there several years. Being again unfortunate in pecuniary matters, he re-embarked for America, arriving at Philadelphia, in 1800, and in the following year, married a grand-daughter of Hesselius, Pastor of the Swedish congregation at Wilmington, Delaware, who brought him some property. Shortly after his marriage, Wertmuller purchased a farm below Marcus Hook on the Delaware, where he died October 5, 1811.

From this portrait, which, though well executed, cannot be considered a characteristic likeness, lacking force and elevation, we have two engravings. In the one by Buttre, a military coat has been added; this is incorrect, as the painting by Wertmuller represents Washington as a civilian. The print by Hall, which is the best, furnishes a good idea of the original.

GILBERT STUART.

1795-96.

THIS eminent Portrait painter was born at Narragansett, Rhode Island, December 3, 1755. His first lessons in art, were received from a Scottish painter named Cosmo Alexander, and by whom, when about eighteen years of age, he was taken to Edinburgh. His stay was, however brief, and upon his return, he practiced his art at Newport and Boston, but the war interfering with his prospects, he decided to transfer his easel to London, as a better field for operation.

Here he received both aid and instruction from Benjamin West, who may not inaptly be termed, the Mecca of American painters, for all who were able to study abroad, seemed to turn to him, as their sure salvation.

Stuart soon became known, and his portraits were highly esteemed. After painting in London for some years, he went to Dublin about the year 1788, where he painted many of the nobility. He returned to America in 1793, the love for his own country, his admiration of General Washington, and the very great desire he had to paint his portrait, being the inducements to turn his back upon his good fortune in Europe. Landing in New York, he was kept constantly employed, until in furtherance of his purpose, he went to Philadelphia.

In the autumn (September,) of 1795, Stuart painted from life, his first portrait of Washington, and during the sitting, as he himself says, could find no subject, although he tried many, of sufficient interest to elicit the expression, he knew must accord with such features, and such a man.

This portrait, in which the head is to the right, not proving satisfactory to the painter, was afterwards, as declared by himself, destroyed or rubbed out. Rembrandt Peale, however, has stated on the authority of Dr. Thornton, of the Patent Office, who was intimate with Stuart, that after five copies of it were made, it was sold to Winstanley, an English landscape painter, then in this country. Winstanley took it to London, where it was bought by Mr. Samuel Vaughan, after whose death it passed into the possession of the late Joseph Harrison, Jr., of Philadelphia. In connection with this statement, may be taken the inscription on the first engraved plate after Stuart, published in London, Nov. 2, 1796, which is as follows: "Engraved by S. Holloway, from a Picture painted by Mr. Stuart in 1795, in the possession of Samuel Vaughan Esqr." An impression from this plate, having been compared with the picture still in the possession of the Harrison family, substantiates the fact of its being an exact rendering of that Portrait.

One of these copies, afterwards touched upon from life, became the property of Colonel George Gibbs, a warm and intimate friend of the painter; it is now owned by his nephew, Dr. William F. Channing, of Providence, R. I.* This is the portrait engraved from by Burt, which, while presenting an exceedingly fine production of the burin, has, through its faithfulness as a translation, made us familiar with an effort of Stuart's, scarcely less important than the well known "Athenæum Head," and certainly possessing marked traits of individuality.

On the twelfth of April, 1796, Washington, at the request of Mrs. Bingham, sat to Stuart for a full length, to be presented to the Marquis of Lansdowne. For this picture, Stuart is said to have had but one sitting, the figure being painted from a person shorter in stature than Washington. Simultaneously with this, he executed one for Mr. Bingham, owned by "The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts," and another for William Constable, now in the possession of his Grandson, Henry E. Pierrepont Esqr., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Stuart subsequently painted another full length, but not from life, in which the right hand is resting upon the table and not extended, as if speaking, as in the Lansdowne picture. This is known as the "Tea Pot Portrait," from the disposition of the arms, and of which he made several replicas. Two of these pictures, are in the State Houses at Providence and Newport, R. I., one at Hartford, Conn., and another is owned by Robert Lenox Esqr., of New York. In these, the figure is turned more to the left, and is much better drawn than in the Lansdowne. Another full length, also not from life, is in military costume, standing by a horse; it is in Faneuil Hall, Boston, and represents Washington at Dorchester Heights.

After the picture was completed for Lord Lansdowne, Washington gave him a commission to paint the portraits of Mrs. Washington and himself. This portrait, known as the "Athenæum Head," was purposely left unfinished, and retained by the artist with the consent of Washington, the distinguished sitter being satisfied with a copy of it.

The original, which was never afterwards touched upon, but left vignette, in the same state as when the eyes of Washington rested upon it, was purchased after the death of Stuart, from his widow, in October, 1831, by the Washington Association of Boston, and other subscribers for fifteen hundred dollars, and presented to the Boston Athenæum.

Stuart made many copies of this head, always adding the bust, and it has been engraved time and time again. It is the best known of all the Washington portraits, and will doubtless retain its hold in the popular mind, as the standard head. Stuart himself, however, considered it inferior to the Houdon bust, placing that first, and his head next. In making this statement, he at the same time referred to the fact that when he painted it, Washington had just had inserted a set of false teeth, which accounted for the constrained expression so noticeable about the mouth and lower part of the face, and that the Houdon bust does not suffer from this defect.

Washington Allston, in an obituary notice of Stuart, published a few days after his decease, speaks of this head as follows: "A nobler personification of wisdom and goodness, reposing in the majesty of a serene conscience, is not to be found on canvas." We doubt, whether any other form of expression, could convey a more complete realization of this remarkable production.

After Congress removed to Washington, Stuart painted in that city for a few years, and then, in 1806, went to Boston, which place he made his permanent residence. Gilbert Stuart (he dropped a middle name, Charles, in early life) died July 27, 1828.

The engravings after Stuart comprise very nearly one-half the numbers of our Catalogue, and candor compels the statement that but few of them present good renderings of the originals. Quite a number of those executed for books, possess but little artistic merit, and seem to have been engraved either from bad copies, or from other prints, in themselves not much better. Of the book plates engraved and published in this country in the early part of the century, much however, should not be expected, as our engravers of that time can scarcely be classed as real practitioners, their opportunities for acquiring any positive knowledge of the art being exceedingly slight, and the remuneration in a corresponding ratio.

The first engraving of the "Lansdowne Portrait," executed by Heath, and from which, perhaps, most if not all the others of the whole picture were copied, although not one of his best plates, is a good rendering of the original. The reputation of the engraver, its early publication and extensive circulation, have made it familiar to all, and its position in public estimation is assured and lasting. The publication of this print without the knowledge of Stuart, was a great disappointment and a source of considerable annoyance to him, inasmuch as he had arranged with Mr. Bingham for the reservation of the copyright. Of this, the Marquis of Lansdowne was not informed, an omission on the part of Mr. Bingham which the artist never forgave. The head and bust from this portrait, has been well given in the prints by Holl, Fittler, Fenner, Sears & Co., Ormsby, and Edwards.

The best and most pronounced engravings after the "Athenæum Head," are those by Durand, Andrews, Marshall, Welch, and H. Wright Smith, the first three named being among the finest examples of engraved portraiture as yet executed in this country, and all, close translations of the original.

The first portrait painted by Stuart, known as the "Vaughan Portrait," is well rendered in the prints by Holloway and Ensom, those by Ridley and Mackenzie, which appear to be from the same picture, being widely different. Of the full-length, known as the "Tea Pot Portrait," several engravings will be found in the appended list, those by Hills and Ritchie, furnishing perhaps, the best idea of the picture. The military portrait has been well engraved by Kelly. The heads engraved by Gimbrede and Rawdon may be intended as from this picture, but if so, the intention has not been successfully carried out, particularly in the latter one.

REMBRANDT PEALE.

THE second son of Charles Willson Peale, was born in Bucks County, Pa. (his mother having left Philadelphia on the approach of the British Army), on the twenty-second day of February, 1778, his Father at the time, being at Valley Forge.

At an early age, he imbibed a great veneration for the person and character of Washington, taking advantage of every opportunity which offered of seeing the First President, and when but eight years old (1786), stood behind his father's chair, while painting a portrait of him for his gallery, watching its progress, and the movements of the sitter's countenance, during his familiar conversation with the artist. This, surrounded as he was by art, and evincing considerable talent as a draughtsman, naturally grew into a controlling desire to paint the portrait of Washington himself, and in the autumn (September) of 1795, Washington, at the request of his father, consented to sit to him, but when the hour arrived the youthful aspirant found himself so much agitated, that he feared to attempt it unless his father would agree to take a canvas alongside of him.

Mr. Peale, during the winter of 1857-8, delivered a lecture in the principal cities of the United States, on "Washington and his Portraits", from a duplicate autograph copy of which, in the possession of Robert Coulton Davis, Esqr., of Philadelphia, we are permitted to make the following extracts, preferring to let the artist speak for himself:—

"Washington gave me three sittings. At the first and second, my father's painting and mine advanced well together; being at my right hand his was a little less full than mine. In the third sitting, perceiving that he was beginning to repaint the forehead and proceed downwards, as was his custom, I feared he would have too little time to study the mouth and lower part of the face, and therefore I began at the chin and proceeded upwards. The result of this decision was, that there was something in the upper part of my father's study that I preferred, and something in the lower portion of mine, which better satisfied me. At subsequent periods I made several studies to combine them. To profit more fully by the occasion, my uncle James Peale during the second and third sittings, painted at my left hand, a miniature on ivory, and for a time, my elder brother stood beyond my uncle, to make a profile sketch.

"Mrs. Washington happened to enter the room at the moment, and being amused by the circumstance, mentioned it to Stuart, who jocularly told her, she must take good care of her husband, as he was in danger of being Peeled all round.

"Washington gave me three sittings of three hours each, from 7 to 10. By these early visits, I had the advantage of seeing his hair in a more natural manner than the barber arranged it, wig-fashion, after 10 o'clock. In this particular, the hair in Col. Trumbull's portrait is much more easy and graceful, as he probably saw it in the negligence of a camp. He shaved himself before coming to me, and the powder being washed from the whiskers in front of his ears, showed that his hair was dark brown. What there was of gray on the top of his head, was disguised with powder; yet there his hair was abundant, and the plaited hair behind, was long and clubbed, to which was attached, on days of state ceremony, in dress of black velvet, the customary appendage of a black silk bag.

"My Portrait wet from the Easel, was packed up and in a few days was opened in Charleston, where I painted ten copies of it, which were valued as the most recent likeness. In executing these, I became familiar with whatever good it possessed, but also, became still more sensitive to its deficiencies.

"After the death of Washington neither satisfied with my father's nor Trumbull's, nor Pine's, nor Wertmuller's, nor Stuart's, nor my own, I made repeated attempts to fix on canvas, the Image which was so strong in my mind, by an effort of combination, chiefly of my father's, and my own studies.

"I had made during several years, sixteen of these attempts; and tho' not equal to my own expectation, they all found satisfied possessors. I determined in 1823, to make a last effort; and under an excitement even beyond the 'Poetic frenzy', which controlled me during three months, to the exclusion of every other thought, and to the grief of my father, who considered it a hopeless effort, I succeeded to his conviction."

This portrait, Mr. Peale carried abroad with him in 1829, exhibiting it in Naples, Rome, Florence, Paris, and London, and sold it after his return (1832), to the Government. It is in senatorial costume, and hangs in the Vice President's room in the Capitol at Washington. Mr. Peale, from time to time, made many copies of it (76). A portrait in military costume, the study for an equestrian picture to commemorate the Siege of Yorktown, was simultaneously painted, and from this also, he made careful copies. Mr. Peale also drew the head twice on the lithographic stone, one of which is larger than life.

Rembrandt Peale, studied in London under Benjamin West, between 1801 and 1804, and subsequently, passed some years in Paris, executing portraits of eminent men for his Father's Gallery. He died at Philadelphia, October 3, 1860.

The lithographic drawings by Peale being original works, are included in our list, the rule of admitting none but plate engravings, being very properly waived in such a case. The one first mentioned, is an exceedingly interesting production, admirably drawn, a fine example of the art, and a perfect fac-simile of the original painting. It is closely copied in the mezzotinto by Walter.

In a communication to William Dunlap, (Arts of Design vol 2 pa. 57), Mr. Peale has furnished the following facts, concerning this print, and his study of Lithography. "I was among the first of the artists who employed this admirable method of multiplying original drawings. My first attempt in New York, was a head of Lord Byron, and a female head from a work of Titian. In 1826, I went to Boston, and devoted myself for some time to lithographic studies, and executed a number of portraits and other subjects, and finally, a large drawing from my portrait of Washington, for which I obtained the silver medal from the Franklin Institute at Philadelphia, in 1827. Unfortunately, the workmen by some neglect, destroyed this drawing on the stone, when but a few impressions were taken."

The head by H. B. Hall executed in line, is a fine example of that engraver's abilities, and a close rendering of the original. The Portrait painted from life in 1795, has not been engraved. The prints in the appended list are after the one executed in 1823.

WILLIAM BIRCH.

ENAMEL Painter and Engraver, was born in Warwick, England, and practiced in London. He exhibited at the Academy for the first time in 1781, and received the Society of Arts Medal in 1785, for excellence in his art, and improvements in the processes. In 1794, he came to the United States, and settled in Philadelphia. Birch executed a miniature in enamel of Washington, which according to the inscription on the engraving of it made by Walker, was painted (1796), from life, in the office of His Excellency The General, by the request of I. G. Van Staphorst, Esqr. of Amsterdam. It will be remembered, that the Van Staphorsts and the extensive mercantile house of John De Neufville & Son of Amsterdam, were firm friends of America, during the revolutionary struggle. The Artist, made several copies of this miniature.

William Birch died at Philadelphia, in 1834. Of the prints in the appended list, the one engraved by P. Roberts after a painting by "W. Birch of Carolina," and repeated as to the head, by W. Read, and in another without engraver's name, published at Paris by "Ménard & Desenne," presents a portrait, somewhat different from the miniature known to us, and from which, the engravings by Walker, Edwin, Hall, and the one printed on satin (no.391), engraver unknown, were executed. We have no knowledge of any other portrait painted by Birch, beside the miniature above referred to, and although the head in the Roberts print, does not bear much resemblance to it, have presumed the lettering to be correct, and placed it in this connection. The engravings by Edwin and Hall and No. 391, are well executed, and are decidedly the best renderings of the miniature, the one by Walker, not being very good in that respect.

JAMES SHARPLESS.

AN Englishman by birth, was educated in France, being intended for the priesthood in the Roman Catholic Church. He, however, preferred the Fine Arts, married after his return to England, and came to this country with his family about the year 1796, landing at New York. He painted in oil, but seems to have practiced mostly in crayons or pastils, which he manufactured for himself. Sharpless visited all the principal cities and towns in the United States, travelling in a four wheeled coach of his own contrivance, which carried the whole family, himself, wife and three children, and all his implements, and was drawn by one large horse.

His Portraits, executed usually in profile upon a small scale, include most of the distinguished persons of the time, and are valued for their character and truth.

When in Philadelphia in 1796, Sharpless drew a profile likeness in pastil of Washington, from life, which has been pronounced by members of the family most able to judge, as the best likeness extant. The artist made many copies from it, as did also Mrs. Sharpless, who painted miniatures in water colors.

James Sharpless died in New York, February 6, 1811, at the age of about sixty years.

The engraving by H. B. Hall, is the only one from this profile, although it has been reproduced several times on wood. It is well executed, and is a fair rendering of the original drawing. A resemblance to this head is introduced into the Memorial Design, engraved by Aikin & Harrison No. 400, a military coat, however, being added.

CHARLES BALTHAZAR JULIEN FEVRET
DE SAINT MEMIN.

To whom we are indebted for the last portrait of Washington taken from life, was born at Dijon, France, on the 12th day of March, 1770, and quite early in life, showed an aptitude for design, and displayed considerable mechanical talent.

Destined for the profession of arms, he entered as a cadet at the military school in Paris, April 1, 1784, was appointed supernumerary Ensign in the following year, and Ensign April 27, 1788. His sympathies at the outbreak of the French Revolution, were with the Royal family, and the army of the Princes being formed, he joined it, and served in that organization until it was disbanded, at which time he was entitled to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, which was afterwards (Jan. 29, 1817), conferred upon him by Louis XVIII, taking grade from May 1, 1792. While with the army, he turned his attention, during his leisure hours, to drawing and painting.

He came to America from Switzerland, where he had learned to gild and carve in wood, landing in Canada in 1793, and from thence going to New York, in which city he learned to engrave.

Towards the end of the last century, a Frenchman named Chrétien, had invented a machine, by means of which he copied the human profile mathematically accurate. This invention, termed physionotrace, had great success. Saint Memin, knowing of the popularity of this process, practiced also by Queneday and others, determined to introduce it into this country, and therefore applied himself to the construction of such a machine, according to his understanding of it, and also made a pantograph.

His profiles, were produced of life size by the physionotrace, and finished in crayon, the pantograph reducing them to the size required for the plate, the portrait being drawn on the copper, in a circle of a little more than two inches in diameter. Having thus obtained the perfect outline, the details were worked up by the graver, the shading being finished by the roulette, the latter tool made by a machine of his own invention.

These profile portraits produced very rapidly, number about eight hundred and twenty, and are interesting, most of them being likenesses of the prominent personages of the time, Saint Memin travelling to all the principal cities of the Union for that purpose, his summers being passed with the family at Burlington, N. J., where he executed the engravings. In this, he was assisted at first by a fellow-exile M. de Valnuit, and the plates produced previous to 1797, when Valnuit returned to France, bear both their signatures. These plates, became the property of the different sitters, Saint Memin retaining only a few impressions, for his private collection.

While in Philadelphia in 1798, Saint Memin secured a profile of Washington, who was in that city during the month of November, engaged in organizing the army for the threatened war with France. This drawing was not engraved at the time like the others, being as it would appear, an undertaking of his own, and was retained by him. It was purchased after his death, from his nephew and heir, and is now in the possession of J. Carson Brevoort, Esqr., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

It is a Bust in uniform, half life-size, drawn in crayon on tinted paper, is strikingly characteristic, and bears every evidence of originality. The engraving by Dudensing, is a fair rendering of this interesting profile, the last portrait of Washington, taken from life.

Saint Memin made a short visit to France in 1810, and returned finally in 1814. At the time of his decease, which occurred June 23, 1852, he was Director of the museum at Dijon, to which office he had been appointed July 27, 1817.

After his return to France, Saint Memin arranged the impressions retained by him of his different plates, in two sets, adding the names of the originals, which being done from memory, are not always correct. These sets purchased at the same time as the above mentioned drawing (November 1859), were brought to this country. One of them is in the "Corcoran Gallery of Art" Washington, and the other is owned by Elias Dexter of New York, who published photographic copies of them in 1862.

All of these prints except two of Washington, are of the same size. One of the Washington's is marked "Houdon," (the drawing, life-size, is also owned by Mr. Brevoort) and the other is founded on the drawing above referred to. The latter, an oval, quite small, is beautifully executed, and it is presumed was not outlined on the plate in his usual manner. This is the print first mentioned in the list.

SILHOUETTES.

OF this style of Portraiture, so popular a century ago, there appear to be only two examples of our subject, at least known to the writer, which have been reproduced through the plate of the engraver. In the last years of the Presidency, an interesting one of this character was taken by Samuel Powel, Mayor of Philadelphia (1775 & 1789), traced on the wall by a shadow thrown from an Argand lamp, which had just then been invented. This, slightly reduced in size, was reproduced on stone, for the "American Historical and Literary Curiosities," Second Series, By John J. Smith, and is now in possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and published considerably smaller, by the Heliotype process, in their proceedings of 1873-'75.

Another cut with scissors, by Miss De Hart of Elizabethtown, N. J. 1783, is well known through its publication on wood, in Irving's Life of Washington. It is extremely unlike any known profile of Washington.

Both of the prints in our list, give characteristic profiles, and on that account are quite interesting.

MEMORIAL DESIGNS.

UNDER this head, will be found such portraits as have been introduced into designs, commemorative of the death and virtues of one, of whom it has been said, that "Until time shall be no more, will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and in virtue, be derived, from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington."

These designs, mostly monumental in character, were published shortly after the decease of Washington, and have now become with one or two exceptions, extremely rare. They are very interesting as evidences of the deep undercurrent of feeling at the time, which sought expression in every available manner. All the engravings in this list, were executed by American engravers.

None of the portraits, are very close to any original, although it has been thought proper as a guide, to indicate in the descriptions, such types as the designer no doubt intended to convey.

FICTITIOUS PORTRAITS.

THE prints included in this list, with the exception of those by Holl and Laugier, in both of which the Stuart head is introduced, and the one in armor, which indicates the Peale Portrait, seem to have been made to order, either in the case of the smaller ones, for careless publishers, or in regard to the larger, created at the whim of the painter or engraver.

In one or two, such as that engraved by Chapman and the one published in the Emigrant's Directory, which is a copy of the head in the print by Bell, they are without doubt, actual portraits of other personages, the name of Washington being substituted on the plate, in lieu of the correct one. The book-plate published by Symonds, London, 1796, representing an elderly gentleman in full dress, in the posture of a dancing master, and awkward at that, was perhaps intended as a caricature on the supposed inability of any American, to appear properly in polite society, the name of Washington as President, being affixed, to give it more point.

The print by Best, after a painting by Christian Schussele, representing Washington at Valley Forge, with the Duché letter, is very well engraved. Those by Perine and Walter, "Washington as a Mason," are after the same picture, but we have no information as to the artist.

Height 17 12-16 inches; width 23 11-16 inches.

APPENDIX.

CHARLES WILLSON PEALE.

IN the sketch of this Artist, attention was called (page 14), to an advertisement in "The Pennsylvania Packet," of August 26, 1780, relative to a print of Washington published by him, executed in mezzotinto after a portrait painted for the Executive Council of the State of Pennsylvania, and that up to the time of writing, no impression of it had come under our notice.

Through information furnished by Mr. John A. McAllister of Philadelphia, we have since been enabled to examine an impression of this plate, in the possession of Mrs. Robert B. Cabeen of Germantown, in whose family it has been from the time of its publication. The picture is a repetition in reverse—the accessories slightly varied,—of the full length commenced by Peale at Valley Forge and engraved by Wolff. The plate is well engraved. We furnish the following description.

Mezzotinto.

Height 11 14-16 inches; width 9 14-16 inches.

Cha^s Willson Peale pinx^t et fecit. This Plate is humbly Inscribed to the Honorable the Congress of the United States of America. By their Obedient Servant, Cha^s Willson Peale.

MADAME de BREHAN.

In the sketch of this Artist, page 68, allusion is made to the earliest engraving from the profile executed by her, an impression of which was presented by Washington to Mrs. Robert Morris; with the statement that the engraving by Charles Burt, No. 114, was copied from this, but that the writer had been unable to see the print, and was not aware of the name of the engraver.

Though the kindness however of Mr. Burt, we have now before us a photograph of this print, presumed to be of the same size as the original, from which we furnish, according to the plan of our work, the following description. The name of the engraver being quite indistinct, and it not appearing in any book, we do not vouch for its accuracy.

SÉRAENT.

Diameter 3 6-16 inches.

Gravé d'après le Camée, peint par M^{me} la Marquise de Bréant, par A. F. Séraent, 1790.
